PROGRAM

CAROL TOSONE

Lying and the Construction of Self

This presentation will address the development and function of lying in relation to one's self-concept from multiple theoretical perspectives. A case example of infidelity will be offered to explicate the process.

CARLOS PADRÓN

The Materialism of the Clinical Encounter: Late Althusser, Psychoanalysis, and Truth

This presentation will explore a notion of truth that emerges by connecting the psychoanalytic clinical encounter with ideas from Louis Althusser's "Materialism of the Encounter," a repressed current within the history of philosophy that departs from traditional metaphysics and conceives the world as the product of contingency and the unpredictable. Clinical vignettes will be offered.

CATHY SIEBOLD

Confronting Triangular Dynamics

The "truth" of gender is a subject of debate. Clinically, this encourages greater openness to hearing triangular struggles from a non-linear, non-binary perspective.

CHRISTIAN J. CHURCHILL

"Surrender and Catch" as a Path to Truth in the Psychoanalytic Situation

The sociologist and ethnographer Kurt Wolff developed an approach to field work stipulating that the researcher must experience "cognitive love" toward the subjects in a field setting in order to understand them. His theory identified five elements of love central to this method: total involvement; suspension of received notions; the pertinence of everything; identification; and openness to the risk of being hurt. The presentation will show how this conceptualization can be applied to psychodynamic treatments that foster understanding and transformation in patients and therapists.

Moderator: Scott Graybow

Each presentation will be followed by dialogue among the panelists and audience.

After attending the presentation, participants will be able to

- Describe normative development of self, and the function that lies play in its development.
- Differentiate between pathological and normative lying.
- Explain Louis Althusser's ideas on the materialism of the encounter as they apply to the psychoanalytic clinical encounter.
- Describe a way of understanding truth within the clinical encounter that departs from traditional metaphysics.
- Discuss contemporary thinking about gender.
- Describe triangular struggles in the treatment process.
- Describe the function of "cognitive love" in helping patients transform the conflicts which generate their symptoms.
- Explain how interdisciplinary thinking fosters the growth of clinical thinking and practice.
